 The four seasons – spring, summer, autumn, and winter – are caused by the Earth's tilt and its orbit around the sun. Each season has its own unique features, with different temperatures and weather patterns.
 Spring is a time of renewal, with flowers blooming, trees re-growing their leaves, and animals coming out of hibernation. The weather is mild, and temperatures begin to rise after the cold of winter.
 Summer follows spring, bringing hot weather, long days, and clear skies. It is a season for outdoor activities like swimming, hiking, and enjoying the sun. The high temperatures make it a popular time for vacations and travel.
 Autumn, or fall, is characterized by cooler temperatures and falling leaves. The days start getting shorter, and the vibrant colors of the leaves are a hallmark of this season. It is also the time for harvest festivals and preparing for the coming cold.
 Winter is the coldest season, often bringing snow and freezing temperatures. Many animals hibernate during this time, and people bundle up in warm clothing. The days are shortest, and the weather is often harsh, with winds, snowstorms, and icy conditions.
